I watched the whole antitrust trial first with hope, then with fear, and now seeing how it will almost surely end, with bitter disappointment that my government is so easily bought out.

The whole situation brings to mind the "Doctors" words toward the end of the movie "Alien"--- something like " I don't have very much hope for you, but you have my sympathy..."

Any end other than a complete breakup of the companies assets being sold off to competitors is in all likelihood far to little, to late.

Microsofts buisness practices and buggy, insecure by design software cost the US and world economies billions of dollars in lost time and revenue every year.

If anyone actually reads this, my regards to you.
